08.17.20	In the The Separation of Certification and Education article, there is some discussion about the training course and the exam being so separate that the training course is not a required pre-requisite for taking the exam. Is that the case with MOLO? Could someone show up and only take the exam in order to earn the credential? Or is the course a required component of receiving MOLO credentials?	The MOLO course is not a prerequisite for taking the exam. A party may sign up to sit for the exam and earn the exam without ever having taken the MOLO course. The course is NOT a required component for receiving the MOLO credential.
